What is Work-Based Learning (WBL)?

- Work-Based Learning is an opportunity for students to apply knowledge gained in the classroom to real-world job experiences.
- WBL benefits students, employers, and educators through interactions with one another.

Work-Based Learning Program Goal

Create a relationship between students, businesses, and the school that benefits all to meet employment needs now and in the future.

Student Benefits

- Learning both in and out of the classroom.
- Develop greater sense of responsibility and dependability.
- Acquire skills and knowledge for a successful career.
- Develop good work habits.
- Improve communication skills.
- Increase self-confidence and self-esteem.

Employer Benefits

- Develop potential employees for current and future needs.
- Reduce orientation costs.
- Obtain highly motivated part-time workers.
- Receive assistance in selection of qualified students.
- Prepare young adults for an occupation and adult citizenship.
- Participate in planning the WBL experience for the student.
- Present positive image for the business.

School Benefits

- Utilize community resources to expand the curriculum and provide individualized instruction.
- Enrich the curriculum by providing school-to-work experiences.
- Assist students in clarifying career goals and means for reaching them.
- Assist local businesses in filling worker needs.
- Allow school personnel to stay up to date on procedures and practices to update course content.
- Further relationships between school and community.
